THEY LOOK AHEAD

One of the myriad of "public opinion polls" recently covered the question of what the people would ask if they were permitted to attend a White House press conference and allowed to ask the President any question they had in mind. Since it was assumed that all would ask first about military phases of the war, questions on this subject were excluded.

The result was construed by the conductors of the poll to provide an index to the present worries of the people and the direction of their thinking about home-front problems.

The questions most frequently submitted in this mythical conference pertained to depression after the war, employment or unemployment, work for demobilized service personnel, postwar wages and what steps are being taken to avoid the necessity for another relief program to alleviate the distress of unemployment.

Naturally, war and victory are uppermost in the people's minds, but not to the exclusion of anxiety about their future. This is a wholesome sign. It reveals that the people are convinced that there is no magic formula for governmental protection or for artificially maintaining a high standard of living.

Common instinct tells the American that he is living in a world of destruction, waste and debt, and that the world can not live indefinitely beyond its means. He knows that if he is to escape the inevitable penalty of waste and debt, he must give more personal attention to his future.

FOREHANDS

Invoking the old law of first come, first served, many American firms now are setting up priority lists of customers for post-war buying. Acting upon the assumption that there will be a scarcity of many items for months after peace comes, from New York to San Francisco orders are being booked for everything from airplanes to nylon hose.

In some cases down payments are made, but many dealers spurn these, preferring to rely on priority lists of prospective customers. Those who accept payments agree to return the money in full in case of inability to fill the order. Deliveries are to be made at factory prices, plus present or future taxes, and subject to rationing rules, if any, in effect at the time of delivery.

Automobiles appear to be in greatest demand, dealers already having booked as many as 200 orders. One plane factory is reported to have 2,000 orders on its books, backed up by deposits in war bonds totaling nearly $2,000,000. Orders for washing machines, radios, vacuum cleaners, refrigerators and scores of other household necessities are being booked by the thousands.

American people have been asked to consume 600,000 pounds of excess cabbage, which may suggest to the GOP the campaign slogan: "Are we men or rabbits?"

BEAUTY PARADE

By Max Factor, Jr.
(Make-Up Advisor to the Screen Stars, Writing for I. N. S.)
HOLLYWOOD — (INS) — Some women apparently are convinced that the more kinds of beauty aid materials they have and use, the more beautiful they inevitably must become.

This conclusion is not true. The number of materials required for the effective accentuation of feminine beauty is not great, and any excess of this number signifies a waste of money, time and sometimes of personal beauty possibilities.

An excess of cosmetic beauty aids is most frequently found in the possession of those women who are inclined to blindly embrace any and all new make-up material and devices which make an appearance on the market, without even hesitating to find out whether the worth of such offerings has been proven, or whether their working principles seem at all reasonable.

These observations are by no means meant as a blanket condemnation of all new achievements and developments in the art of make-up. Many worthwhile perfection have been achieved for this art in the past, and more will be in the future.

But the fact still remains that not all new cosmetic offerings can be regarded as sound beauty aids. An example of such unsoundness is provided by the case of the purple lipstick and purple rouge which a minority of Hollywood's glamour girls was favoring only six months ago. Today not one of these stars is using either of these cosmetic materials in such a morbidly unnatural shade. The (ad was a short-lived one, as any basically unsound fad must be.

In your search for beauty, be skeptical of acquiring such things as "wrinkle removing creams" which claim to contain "vitamins" which can be massaged into the skin, and "hair color restoratives."

There are no "wrinkle removing creams" which will discourage wrinkles any more than a regular skin nourishing cream will; it yet has to be proven that "vitamins" can be massaged into the skin to any appreciable complexion advantage; and you must realize that "hair color restoratives" are nothing but hair dyes. Dye your hair if you must, but at least don't fool

WILSON AVENUE AND HARRISON STREET

THE RED CARNATION by BURTON STEVENSON

CHAPTER THIRTY-EIGHT

"I wonder if you noticed what time Mr. Herschel Schneider went out Thursday night?" Tony asked, in a voice as casual as he could make it.

"I did, sir. I remember very well," McGinty answered promptly, "because he had a bag with him and stopped to talk for a minute while he was waiting for a taxi. He said he was going down to Washington."

"What time was it?" asked Tony. "Just eight o'clock, sir. I remember Mr. Schneider taking out his watch and looking at it and saying he would have to hurry, as he was catching the 8:35 train."

The columnist thanked the door-man and went on toward the elevators. He was whisked up to the seventh floor. The door of Metcalf's office was closed, but when he rang the bell, it was opened by the brunette secretary. She looked pale and her eyes had heavy circles under them.

"I understand that Dr. Metcalf's brother is here taking charge of things," Tony said.

"Yes," she should like to see him.

"He is not here at the moment."

"But you expect him?"

"Yes, any time."

"Then I'll come in and wait, if I may."

"Of course," and she held the door wide and then closed it after him. "Sit down," she added, and went back to her place behind the desk. There was an open ledger on it, and he judged she was getting out the doctor's bills. Tony did not down, but went over and stood beside the desk. He was elated that he should have this opportunity to talk with her alone.

"You remember me, don't you, Miss Scott?" he said.

"Oh, yes."

"I was here Thursday afternoon," he went on rapidly. "And I was here Thursday night. In fact, it was what Dr. Metcalf told me in the afternoon that brought me around here that night. There is something unexplained about this affair, Miss Scott. Perhaps you feel the same way."

"I do," she said and looked up at him with eyes full of misery. "But for the present I think it should be allowed to rest."

"Why?"

"So that—everyone will think—no, I can't tell you now. I can't talk to you here. Please don't say any more."

"I'll say only one thing more, my dear," Tony said gently, "and that is that when you do feel like telling me, I hope you will."

The columnist crossed the room and sat down in a chair against the wall. The girl had turned around to her machine and he could not see her face, but her hands were trembling so that she could scarcely adjust the paper in the carriage. And then the door opened and a man came in—a short, bald-headed man of middle age. He looked at Tony with sharp, deep-set eyes, and then glanced suspiciously at the girl bent over the machine. Evidently visitors were not welcome.

"I'm waiting to see Dr. Metcalf's brother," Tony explained, getting to his feet.

"I am Dr. Metcalf's brother," Tony looked at him in surprise. He could see no resemblance between this little, portly man like his face and the vivid, almost oriental face of Dr. Metcalf.

"What is it you want?"

"I'm Antony Bigelow," Tony explained.

"If Dr. Metcalf's brother had ever heard of the famous columnist, no slightest trace of it appeared on his countenance."

"It's evident," said Tony, with a little laugh, "that I'm unknown to you. It just shows what an ingrown place New York is. As it happens, I'm a columnist."

"A columnist?"

"Yes—one who writes a column in a newspaper, you know."

The expression of the sharp little eyes grew distinctly more hostile.

"Oh, a reporter," said the man, gruffly. "I don't want any more publicity—there has been too much already," and he turned toward the inner office.

"You can't avoid it. I'm afraid, if it should turn out that your brother was murdered," said Tony suavely. The other stopped abruptly and looked at him. Then he glanced again at the secretary bending over her machine.

"Murdered?" he repeated. "Ridiculous."

"Nevertheless," said Tony, "it might be worth your while to see me."

Metcalf regarded him for a moment in silence, then motioned with his head toward the inner room.

"All right, come in," he said.

As Tony followed him, he ventured to cast a glance at the secretary. She was staring at him, her eyes blazing, her lips quivering. A moment later the inner door closed after him. Metcalf sat down behind the desk and motioned Tony to the patients' chair.

"Now," he said, "what is this nonsense you were talking?"

"Do you mean to say that you are really satisfied with this suicide theory?" Tony demanded.

"Of course I'm satisfied. What other theory could there be?"

"Why should a man who had everything to live, commit suicide?" Tony countered.

"He had killed a man. He was under suspicion."

"Oh," said Tony. "You believe that, too, do you?"

"Of course I believe it. Reluctantly, you understand," Metcalf added, a little hastily. "Naturally, it isn't pleasant to believe that one's brother was a murderer, but one can't get around the proof. I have gone into it thoroughly. And let me say to you, sir, that I shall deeply resent any further newspaper scandal and will take any legal action necessary to prevent it. Jerome is dead. He should be left in peace."

"Nothing that anybody can do will disturb him," Tony pointed out, a little dryly. "The people who will be disturbed are still alive—and unpunished. I wonder if you would mind telling me just why he killed McKibben?"

"McKibben had robbed him. He was trying to blackmail him. Jerome would have been ruined professionally—if McKibben had taken his story to the newspapers."

"You mean about the dictograph records?"

"Yes."

Tony looked at him curiously. "You are certainly well-informed," he said, "but wonder who explained all this to you?"

Metcalf flushed angrily. "I refuse to discuss the matter," he snapped. "I repeat, Jerome is dead . . ."

"And so it doesn't make much difference how he died? I see. Did he leave a will?"

Metcalf sprang from his seat. "What business is that of yours?" he demanded.

"It is my business to give the public the news," Tony answered. "This is news. Why on earth should you object to telling me?"

Metcalf controlled himself with an effort.

"I don't object to telling you," he said, "but your manner is offensive. You seem to be intimating that I am trying to conceal something or protect somebody."

"I think you are, if you let this matter rest where it is . . ."

"Besides," Metcalf went on, without heeding him, "my attorney has warned me not to talk to reporters. You'd better see him. His name is Herschel Schneider."

"Is he the one who explained the case to you?"

"He told me the details, certainly. That was his business, wasn't it?"

"I suppose so," Tony assented a little wearily, and rose to his feet. "Will you be here for some time yet?"

"I'm going home tonight," Metcalf answered. "Jerome is to be buried in the morning. Then I expect to come back for a few days."

Metcalf opened the door into the outer room and waited for Tony to pass through, then stood watching him as he crossed to the outer door. The secretary was busy at her machine and did not look up.

"Goodbye, Mr. Metcalf," he said over his shoulder. "Perhaps I'll have a surprise for you by Monday," and he stepped out into the hall and closed the door after him. The instant the words were out of his mouth he knew he should not have uttered them.

There was a stairway just opposite the door, and Tony mounted swiftly to the eighth floor and touched the bell of apartment 810. In a moment the door opened and Joe was standing there. He looked worn and sorrowful, but his face lighted up when he saw Tony.

"Can you get away for a hour, Joe?" Tony asked. "I've got something I want you to do."

"Sure, I get away," said Joe. "All right. I'll meet you at the service entrance. I don't want anyone to see us going out together. Understand?"

Joe nodded and closed the door softly, and Tony dropped down to the lobby.

"No taxi this time, Terence," he said to the doorman, as the latter raised his whistle, and he walked around the corner into the side street.

HARRISBURG, Mar. 17 — Gov. Martin's blunt warning to the Liquor Control Board to crack down on "dives" was expected to lead to the enforcement of liquor laws. Chairman Fred T. Gelder would discuss a statewide effort to eliminate irresponsible proprietors because he believed the Board's enforcement was insufficiently vigilant. Apparently the Governor was satisfied with Gelder's contention in a closed session of officials and enforcement officers ordered a vigorous prosecution of violators. One drawback of sufficient enforcement to sweep the state before

State Sen. John M. Walker (R), Allegheny, said he will press for a Constitutional amendment to lower the voting age for Pennsylvanians to 18. . . . The commission on teacher cooperation has urged teachers to survey their classrooms for potential teachers to take over the classrooms in the postwar era. . . . The commission, endorsed by the Pennsylvania State Educational Association, stated that "the success of education in the postwar period will depend in part on the kind of teachers we have in our public schools." . . . Oscar Granger, chairman of the Teacher Recruitment Committee, said the place education "holds in the preservation of our democracy would justify teachers using their positions in guiding desirable youth into their own profession." . . . Fighting Machinery For and Against Invasion is Shaping Up Rapidly will galvanize Hitler's continental fortress into a live volcano.

However far-fetched this may or may not be from the exact situation, the public mind is by now filled with anticipation.

There is the usual sizeable fraction of cautious pessimists who shake their heads and point woefully to Anzio as the forerunner of the shape of things to come. They already see the Allied armies fighting this year through on a new "western front" in the red-trenches of 1918. The optimists point up to the drumming air-madness overhead, to the hard blows given Germany through Allied bombings, and the mortal punches of the Soviet armies against the Wehrmacht. They draw on the failure of the German U-boats and say that the combined Allied navies will help blow Hitler's beach defenses to hell.

They are willing to bet that Allied troops will stand guard over the ruins of Berlin on Christmas Eve of this year.

But actually, there is little to glean from. The more realistic factors and straws in the wind are the intense air offensive against the continent, the busy but silent navies at work, and combat armies "toughening up" in the fields and hills of England or practicing invasion maneuvers on the beaches. A reminder that the other side is busy too are the recurring Luftwaffe raids on England.

For the remainder, the man-in-the-street must be satisfied with what comes in bits and chips from government and army leaders, spiced now and then or more often just mixed with voluntary "information" broadcast to him from the other side of the Channel. At the end of the week in this pre-invasion stage, he has a somewhat vague Chinese puzzle to add up or string together.

As a sample of what can be digested formula, here are thumb-packed into a week's pre-invasion nail summaries of choice morsels from the Allied side:

Crowded Britain received new contingents of American troops, along with equipment and supplies.

Air Minister Sir Archibald Sinclair told the House of Commons that "we are approaching the climax of the war" and that the invasion air plans are all set and that the RAF is ready.

War Minister Sir James Grigg announced that the British army is ready to play a major part in the defeat of Hitler and that the invasion army is better than was Montgomery's famed Eighth. He added that in his opinion, Germany is bound to crack up under the coming assault.

It was disclosed that 1250 London taxicabs plying the streets by day and night have been earmarked for national service. Under this measure, the taxi fleet and its drivers will be on call and available "at the service for the state" within two hours.

In every large town and city in Britain, according to the announcement, houses are to be canvassed for blood donors. They want masses of them to save the lives of soldiers, sailors and airmen becoming casualties on the second front.

In that connection, a flood of material has suddenly become available on the vast preparations underway to take care of the influx of wounded once the invasion begins. In addition to numerous base hospitals in Britain awaiting capacity loads, much attention has been paid to quick and large-scale evacuation from the continent of wounded men.

As speed is essential in saving lives, the bulk of evacuation will take place by air. It has consequently been revealed that when the invasion starts, whole evacuation squadrons will take the air. Ninth Airforce troop carrier officials explained that each such mercy squadron is composed of 12 planes, capable of carrying eighteen litter patients per plane.

Another announcement revealed that army nurses are getting ready to slog it out on even terms with men once the second front opens. Some of them have been undergoing rigorous training under combat conditions to adapt themselves for work in front line field hospitals.

This collection by no means exhausts all announcements made in connection with the invasion. And, in addition, the enemy side of the Channel has been equally active and full of pronouncements.

ural resources."

In a sincere effort to make Pennsylvania known as "The Dogwood State," Adolph Muller, public spirited citizen of many interests, had during his life-time distributed over 200,000 dogwood seedlings to organizations, school children and individuals to be planted along the highways, on lawns and in the country-side. "This truly American tree is considered by many to be the finest flowering tree in the world," states H. Gleason Mattoon, in speaking of Muller's interest in beautifying the landscape with such trees. "It is attractive in the autumn also when the rich reds of its foliage blend with the scarlet of its clustered fruit. In late fall when the birds migrate they stop to feast on the fruit. In that way are the seed scattered to increase the profusion of trees. . . . Some day we shall again travel in early May. So let us plant flowering dogwoods now that there may be many more lovely displays living memorials to those who die that the peoples of the world may live in freedom."

Following the minstrel show the patrons were entertained by the Black and White Orchestra of Burlington, N. J., during their topical choral movements, until after midnight, and all were most vociferous in their praise of the orchestra's renditions.

Previous to the dancing "Cactus Pete" Gallone and partner entertained with Western songs and yodeling.

ON THE contrary, both were exceedingly averse to our entrance into war and each, in effect, promised that if elected we would not so in; that our boys would "never be sent to fight in a foreign land." Pearl Harbor changed all that for Mr. Roosevelt, Mr. Willkie and Mr. Dewey, too. Under the circumstances, it is absurd to try hanging an isolation tag on Mr. Dewey, but that does not prevent the effort being made. It involves, too, utterly effort to brand him as an isolationist because four years ago he was "nationalistic in his outlook" and averse to getting into the European war. Also, it is pointed out that some of the anti-Willkie isolationists now prefer him to Mr. Willkie. These arguments do not make sense. To regard Mr. Dewey as an isolationist because some isolationists are for him is just about as silly as regarding Mr. Roosevelt as a Communist because Mr. Earl Browder, Mr. Harry Bridges and all the other Communists are strongly for his reelection. And to stress now Mr. Dewey's 1940 nationalistic viewpoint, forces one to recall that in the 1940 campaign neither Mr. Roosevelt nor Mr. Willkie then had anything to say about "international co-operation."

ignoring the 1943 Dewey record on the issue of international post-war co-operation. Last summer, at the Mackinac conference, Mr. Dewey came out flatly for a permanent alliance between the British and ourselves as the basic essential for peace as well as war. He advocated the keeping as allies after the war Russia and China and admitting the smaller and neutral nations later to the general international organization for the preservation of peace. Finally, he subscribed to the Mackinac declaration, which committed the Republican party to the principle of post-war international co-operation. If either Mr. Roosevelt or Mr. Willkie has gone farther than this, it is not on the record.

THE OTHER point on which Mr. Dewey is being attacked is his silence. From various quarters it is demanded that he "speak out," "tell the people where he stands," "openly debate the issues." Some of these demands are sincere; others are made for the purpose of politically embarrassing him; none of them is sound. They ignore so many facts. For example, they ignore the fact that Mr. Dewey already has "spoken out" on the matter of foreign policy. And on the domestic side he has made one of the most wholehearted and specific indictments of New Dealism that has been made. The further fact is ignored that should he be nominated he will have nearly five months to acquaint the people with his views and that further speeches now could not be reconciled with the sincerity of his declaration that he is not a candidate for the nomination and would not sanction any effort to get it for him.

HIS opponents are eager to convict him of insincerity out of his own mouth and he would be a fool to fall into the trap. Of course, he wants to be President, but so long as he maintains his present inactivity he is no more vulnerable on the charge of insincerity than Mr. Roosevelt, who openly connived in the 1940 "draft" and is the real engineer of the 1944 one. There is also the argument that though Mr. Willkie has "spoken out" he has managed to avoid saying a good many things—for example, where he stands on the sales tax; whether he favors a national service act; how he would prevent strikes while the war is on. And in the matter of foreign policy there is now widespread complaint that Mr. Roosevelt has not taken the people into his confidence as to what his foreign policies really are—and some doubt that he really knows. Take it all in all, it is reasonable doubt as to his position on international co-operation and on his attitude toward New Deal. Mr. Dewey may well let his record as Governor of New York speak for him until the convention. If he isn't nominated then he will not have to speak at all.

Pastor
Bristol Presbyterian Church

O God, our Father, Who art above all things, and in Whom we live and move and have our being, hear us as we pray for those whom we love. Though they be separated from us by time and space we know they are not beyond Thy loving care. Though they are beyond our help and fellowship we know that Thy spirit will be with them and strengthen and support them in all the trials which they daily face. Grant, O Loving Father, that the trials through which they pass may but serve to draw them closer to Thee, and to awaken within their hearts a new sense of need, which can be satisfied only by Thee. Stuffed Pork Chops

This version of an old favorite—stuffed pork chops—is a real treat. The dish is in tune with the times. Jessie Alice Cline, home economist, points out, for the stuffing absorbs and extends the flavor of the meat, increases the size of the serving, and stretches the meat satisfaction of the meal.

Saucy Stuffed Pork Chops
6 pork chops
1 cup tart apple sauce
1 cup cracker crumbs

1/4 cup melted drippings

1 egg

1 teaspoon salt

1/4 teaspoon pepper

Have pork chops cut thick. With a sharp knife cut a pocket 1 1/2 inches long on inside of each chop. Combine remaining ingredients for stuffing. Fill pocket in chops with stuffing and brown meat on both sides. Cover pan and cook slowly in moderate oven (350 degrees F.) for about 1 hour. If there is more stuffing than needed to fill chops, place it to one side of baking dish and cook with the meat. Serves 6.

SPORTSMEN'S BRIEFS

By JOE ELBERSON

Another fishing contest... for members only of the Bristol Fish & Game Protective Association. Twenty-five dollars in cash prizes, as follows: Bass, $10; Trout, $5; Pickerel, $5; common fish, except carp and eels, $5. Headquarters and weighing-in station will be located at Diamond Sporting Goods, Mill Street. Contest opens April 1st and runs to November 30th. All entries, except trout, must be caught on open water in Bucks County, or the Delaware River which forms a portion of the boundary of the county. Trout may be caught and entered from any public fishing streams in the State. Only those entries will be considered official which have been made by persons who have been members of the local Association for at least 10 days prior to making an entry. Ollie Hobbs is chairman of the committee in charge of the contest. He states that a children's contest, open to all "kids," will be conducted during the Summer. Details for this special feature will be announced at a later date.

Pistols and rifles... those persons interested in target matches with either should contact Sidney Popkin, Mill Street, newly appointed chairman of a Pistol and Rifle committee of the Bristol Fish & Game Ass'n. Other members of the committee are Jack Lynn and John Simons.

Only 23 more days... to the opening of trout season in Pennsylvania. The opening day falls on Saturday this year. Time to get your flyrod ready and to check your line and leaders.

Trapshooters, attention... another blue rock and skeet event is scheduled for this Sunday over the traps of the Langhorne Rod & Gun Club. Shoot will start at 10:30 in the morning. It's open to anyone desiring to participate. Choose your own targets—either skeet or blue rock, or both. The Lewis Class system of determining winners will be employed.

Sign of Spring... two very small youngsters fishing in the Canal near Beaver street on Wednesday afternoon.

Sixty-two years ago... from the Bucks County Gazette of Oct. 5, 1882: "Dr. Myer Birkley captured a red lizard in Roberts Run on Saturday last. It is said to be a rare specimen, and the first of the kind ever known to have been captured in this section of the County. It is now at the Academy of Natural Sciences."

And from the same issue of the Gazette was printed: "Pike, sunfish and turtles have been caught in the gullies and pools caused by the breaking of the bank at the mill pond" (Now Silver Lake.)

Date to remember: Monday, March 20th—next meeting of the Edgely Rod & Gun Club in the Headley Manor Fire House at 8 P. M.

HOME-MADE TYPE OF EQUIPMENT MAKES PRESSING SIMPLE

By Mary E. Jacoby (Home Economics Representative)

A ham-shaped pressing cushion will help to give the family clothing a professional pressing appearance. The cushion is about 15 inches long and 9 inches wide at one end, tapering to 3 inches at the other end. It is ideal for pressing shoulders, armholes, and other curved seams.

Firm, smooth canvas is the best material from which to make the pressing cushion. Cut two oval-shaped pieces, 15 by 9 by 3 inches, making allowances for seams. Sew the pieces together leaving an opening so bag may be filled with sawdust. The sawdust should be dry and tightly packed. As the cushion is used it will press down and may need more stuffing. If sawdust is not available, use small scraps of cloth but be sure the cushion is firm and smooth.

Now from a soft material like outing flannel cut two more pieces of the same shape and size, sew together, and cover the cushion. Then from unbleached muslin cut two more pieces to make a cover that can be removed and washed when soiled. Heavy unbleached muslin can be substituted for canvas for the first cover.

Another convenience is a press roll for pressing seams. Pad a piece of broom handle about 18 inches long or a thin magazine, rolled tightly. Wrap in several layers of clean cotton cloth and use for pressing seams. The pressure of the iron comes only on the seam and leaves no mark of the seam edge.

A velvet board is ideal for pressing velveteen and other materials with a nap. From cotton cloth, make a pad about 1 inch thick, 18 inches long, and 10 inches wide, over the top with a firm piece of velveteen, face up. When pressing, place the pile fabric face down against the velveteen and steam press tightly.

SPARROWS MOVE INTO 2ND PLACE IN N. J. GIRLS' GROUP

Fleetwings Girls Defeat Cathedral Alumnae By Score of 23 to 20

MAJORETTES ALSO WIN

Hughes Scores A Double-Decker To Put Team In the Lead

TRENTON, Mar. 17—The Fleetwings Sparrows took second place in the Trenton Girls League last night, winning over Cathedral Alumnae, 23-20. The Majorettes maintained their grip on first place by scoring a 60-18 triumph over Bond Belles.

The Fleetwings went in front right at the start when Hughes dropped in a double-decker. They held on to this edge in the first period which finished with the Bristol girls in the lead, 5-3. The second quarter was the best for the aircraft workers as they dropped 10 points into the net while their guards managed to hold the Alumnae to a pair of field goals.

Cathedral found its scoring eye in the third session and with Burns leading the attack scored 7 points while Linck scored two Fleetwings points. In the final period, the teams broke even with both getting six points.

Eleanor Hughes and Ethel Linck were high for Fleetwings with two of its points. Burns and Nolan accounted for 15 of the Cathedral points.

STATE BRIEFS

CARLISLE (INS)—Lt. Robert Dalzell, of Pittsburgh, told Carlisle

the Americans were surprised to find that the number had doubled. Dalzell was wounded in action.

ERIE (INS)—What is said to be the worst epidemic of rabies in 35 years has affected Erie dogs. The city health director revealed that 20 afflicted dogs have died from the disease in the past few weeks. More than 100 dogs have been inoculated against the infection.

WILKES-BARRE (INS)—A bit of the "Wild West" came to Wilkes-Barre when seven steers escaped from cattle cars. While rounding them up, two policemen fell into a creek. The police snared four and shot the other three cattle when they found themselves unable to corral them.

GALLITZIN (INS)—Lt. Walter P. Dean, 22, of Gallitzin, a Marine aerial photographer, was one of the first airmen to fly over the Japanese stronghold of Truk. He made a reconnaissance trip with 21 other companions on February 4, according to a letter he wrote his family.
